Monetary policy remains in focus this week

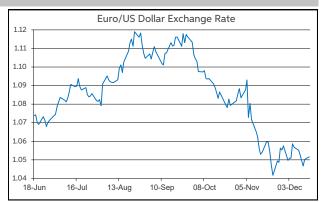

Monetary policy was very much in focus for investors last week, with a raft of central bank policy meetings. This included the ECB who, as expected, cut rates by 25bps. It also adopted a more dovish bias in its communications. However, despite this, market rate expectations for ECB rates actually firmed somewhat (c.10bps). Futures contracts are now pricing in around 115bps of policy easing in 2025. This suggests the market had been anticipating stronger dovish guidance from the ECB. Instead, President Lagarde continued to emphasise "data-dependency" and would not pre-commit to future rate cuts.

Currency-wise, the dollar generally held the upper hand last week amid weakness in other currencies. The euro was on the defensive in the lead up to the ECB meeting. However, it saw no major reaction in the aftermath. Elsewhere, sterling's recent momentum subsided on Friday following weaker than forecast GDP data. Meanwhile, the Japanese yen was under sustained pressure amid uncertainty as to whether the BoJ will hike rates this week. In level terms, all of the above is reflected in EUR/USD opening this morning just above $1.05 with GBP/USD trading in the lower half of $1.26-1.27. EUR/GBP is back above 83p, having registered a YTD low of 82.26p last week. USD/JPY is up in ¥153-154 territory.

Ahead this week, monetary policy will remain in focus with another plethora of central bank meetings. Aside from the aforementioned BoJ, the US Fed (25bps cut expected) and BoE (no rate change) provide some event risk for their respective currencies. The data calendar is packed for the last full trading week of the year. Some of the highlights include flash PMIs, US retail sales, core-PCE as well as UK CPI and labour market updates.
