

Risk-off mood to start the week

There was a risk-off tone to investor sentiment yesterday, amid a relatively quiet start to the week. US markets were closed for Martin Luther King Day. The Euro Stoxx 50 declined by 0.6%, erasing its modest gains from last week. On bond markets, German Bund yields rose by circa 5bps, while UK Gilts were little changed. Elsewhere, Brent crude oil remains close to $78 per barrel.

Data-wise, Eurozone industrial production declined by 0.3% in November, matching the consensus. Meanwhile, the first estimate of German full year GDP registered a 0.3% contraction in 2023. Worryingly, the slowdown was broad based, with consumption, government expenditure and investment all falling. In terms of monetary policy, remarks from a number of ECB Governing Council members pushed back against market expectations for rate cuts in the early part of this year, echoing comments from ECB Chief Economist Lane at the weekend. However, neither the data or the remarks greatly influenced the euro.

Indeed, the main FX pairs remained confined to tight trading ranges. Of the limited moves to note, the dollar was holding a firmer tone overnight. As trading gets underway this morning, the stronger dollar is evidenced by GBP/USD opening back in the $1.26-1.27 corridor. EUR/USD is in the lower half of $1.09-1.10. Meantime, EUR/GBP remains in and around 86p.

Already this morning, UK labour market data have printed broadly in-line with expectations. The unemployment rate stayed at 4.2% in November, while average earnings growth slowed to 6.5% y/y. However, the data have not impacted sterling in early trading. The calendar for the remainder of today is quite sparse, although comments from a slew of central bank officials will be of interest.
