FX majors range bound

After the previous day's inflation data inspired moves, the market action yesterday was less eventful. This was despite a relatively busy calendar of macro data. The pre-open release of UK GDP for November, indicated a very modest pace of growth in the month, of +0.1% (f'cast for +0.2%). Overall the data suggests the UK economy continues to lack momentum.

In the US, headline retail sales for December missed to the downside of expectations, printing at +0.4% m/m (f'cast for 0.6%). However, underlying sales were stronger than forecast, indicating a solid end to the year for the key consumer spending side of the US economy. In other US data, the regional Philly Fed index (Jan) and homebuilder sentiment (Jan) both surprised to the upside.

In terms of market moves, bond yields continued to move lower, but not to the same extent as Wednesday. The main benchmark sovereign 10-year yields were 1-5bps lower on the day. There was some 'dovish' Fed comments for the market to digest.

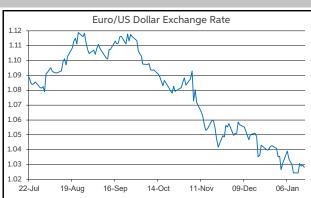

On the currency front, the majors operated within narrow ranges yesterday. The EUR/USD pair was trading in a tight corridor just below the $1.03 mark. Meanwhile, EUR/GBP retained its position in the lower half of the 84-85p band. Elsewhere, GBP/USD was trading near to the $1.22 level.

Today's macro schedule has already seen the release of UK retail sales for December. Headline sales were reported at -0.3% m/m, which was much weaker than the consensus (f'cast for +0.4%). The UK macro newsflow has put sterling on the defensive in early trading this morning. The other main data highlight today is from the US diary, with industrial production (Dec) due this afternoon.
