Softer dollar to start the week

The positive tone to risk appetite from last week carried over into the beginning of this week. Investor sentiment received an added fillip from reports that US President Trump would not introduce new trade tariffs on day one in office. Against this backdrop, the Euro Stoxx 50 gained 0.3% yesterday. US markets were closed for Martin Luther King Day celebrations.

Currency-wise, the dollar came under some downward pressure following the aforementioned reports that no new US trade tariffs would be announced. This saw EUR/USD rise to a high of $1.043, while GBP/USD climbed to a peak of $1.2326. However, the dollar recouped some of its losses before the close yesterday. Overnight, the dollar maintained support, as President Trump threatened to introduce tariffs against Canada, Mexico, the EU and China.

As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD is changing hands in the top half of the $1.03-1.04p range. Meantime, GBP/USD is operating in the upper region of the $1.22-1.23 corridor. At the same time, EUR/GBP is at the midpoint of the 84-85p band. Elsewhere, USD/JPY is below the ¥156 threshold.

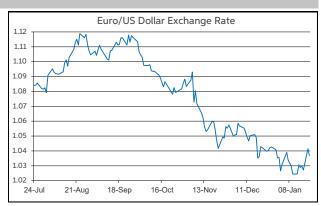

Already this morning, the latest batch of UK labour market data have been released. The unemployment rate rose to 4.4% in November as expected, while average earnings growth accelerated to +5.6% y/y, in-line with the consensus. The data have not impacted sterling in early trading.

Later today, the main highlight of a relatively sparse macro calendar will be the German ZEW economic sentiment indicator for January. At the same time, investors will keep a close eye on developments in Washington.
