

Dollar moves off its lows overnight

There was a subdued mood on markets yesterday. Once more, a muted macro calendar likely contributed to the limited price action across the various asset classes. For a second day running the S&P 500 registered a meagre 0.1% gain. Meantime, the Euro Stoxx 50 moved 1.0% lower, amid some disappointing Q2 earnings reports.

On bond markets, yields continued to decline across the board, albeit the moves were not as pronounced as the day prior. Yields fell by circa 1-4bps in the US, UK and Eurozone. Once again though, there was no obvious catalyst for the moves, which may well have been exacerbated by thin summer trading conditions.

Currency-wise, the dollar remained on the defensive. Sterling was also under some downward pressure throughout the European session. However, the greenback and the pound recouped most/all of their losses overnight.

Meanwhile, trading conditions for the yen have been choppy over the past 24 hours. A trade deal between the US and Japan was agreed overnight, meaning a 15% tariff will now apply to Japanese exports. At the same time, reports suggest that PM Ishiba may resign, following poor election results for his party at the weekend. Against this backdrop, the yen remains firmer overall, but it is well of its peak.

As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD opens in the lower half of $1.17-1.18. GBP/USD is changing hands above $1.35. EUR/GBP remains in the top half of the 86-87p band. USD/JPY is just above ¥147, having traded in the bottom half of ¥146-147 yesterday.

Today, the main release of note will be the flash reading of Eurozone consumer confidence for July. A slight improvement is expected in the month. In the US, existing home sales are due. However, barring any major surprises, the data are unlikely to influence markets.
