

Yen remains volatile

Investor sentiment soured yesterday, despite some better than anticipated US data. Growing speculation that the BoJ may tighten policy and a surprise decision Chinese central bank to cut rates also impacted the mood on markets. Overall, the Euro Stoxx 50 shed 1%, while the S&P 500 declined by 0.5%.

Data-wise, US GDP printed ahead of the consensus, rising by 2.8% annualised in Q2 (vs. 2.0% f'cast). Consumer spending (+2.3%), fixed investment (+3.6%) and Government expenditure (+3.1%) were the main drivers of growth. Meanwhile, the Q2 reading of core-PCE inflation rose by 2.9% annualised (vs. +2.7% f'cast). In contrast, both the German Ifo and French INSEE business sentiment indicators for July deteriorated and printed below expectations.

On the currency front, the yen was holding a firmer tone in the early part of the European session. This saw USD/JPY fall to a low of ¥151.9. However, as the day progressed the yen came under some downward pressure. Elsewhere, the dollar firmed in the initial aftermath of the US GDP release. Meantime, sterling was on the back-foot.

In level terms, EUR/USD starts this morning at the midpoint of the $1.08-1.09 range. EUR/GBP is nearer to the halfway mark of 84-85p. Meanwhile, GBP/USD is operating close to the heart of the $1.28-1.29 band. USD/JPY opens in the top half of ¥153-154.

Turning to the day ahead, the main release of note will be the June reading of US core-PCE inflation. The consensus is for a modest decline to 2.5%, albeit the Q2 data released yesterday suggests it may be higher. At the same time, US personal consumption and income for June are projected are also due.
