EUR/USD above $1.08. ECB to cut by 25bps today

Equity markets recovered some of their recent losses on both sides of the Atlantic yesterday, led by a rebound in the Euro Stoxx 50, which rose by 1.9%. Meantime on Wall Street, the S&P 500 recouped a more modest 1.1%. Throughout the day, investors were digesting plans to significantly increase fiscal spending in Germany, some better than anticipated US data and reports that the US may remove/reduce tariffs on Canadian goods.

On bond markets, plans to increase German government spending on infrastructure and defence, as well as to reform the debt brake led to a surge in German Bund yields. The 10-year yield rose by 30bps yesterday. Elsewhere on bond markets, 10-Year UK Gilt yields moved 14bps, amid a modest firming in UK futures contracts. In contrast, 10-year US Treasury yields edged 6bps.

Currency-wise, the euro remained firmly in the ascendancy yesterday, supported by the sharp rise in German yields. At the same time, the dollar was on the defensive once again, despite the US non-manufacturing ISM printing above the consensus in February (53.5 vs. 52.6 f'cast). This saw EUR/USD register another new year-to-date high of $1.0822.

As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD remains above the $1.08 threshold. GBP/USD is operating up above the $1.29 handle. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP is changing hands in the upper half of the 83-84p band.

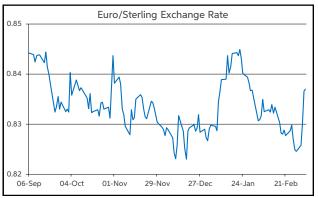

Today, the focus will be on the ECB monetary policy meeting. A 25bps rate cut is widely expected. However, investors will be paying keen interest to see if the ECB states policy is still restrictive. The updated staff projections will also warrant attention.
