US labour market due today

As expected, the ECB cut interest rates by 25bps yesterday. The Deposit rate was lowered to 2.50%. Both the meeting statement and remarks at the post-meeting press conference stressed that the ECB is highly data dependent given the uncertain economic outlook. Thus, while the ECB maintains a willingness to cut rates again if warranted, the direction of policy has become less clear. Markets are pricing in circa 40bps of rate cuts by year end.

Elsewhere, the US delayed placing tariffs on all USMCA-compliant goods from Canada and Mexico until April 2nd. However, equity markets continued to move lower in the US, with the S&P 500 falling by 1.8% yesterday. Meantime, the Euro Stoxx 50 gained 0.6% on the day.

Currency-wise, the euro remained on the front-foot yesterday. The single currency rose to a high of $1.0853 against the dollar and to 84.11p versus sterling. However, the euro handed back some of its gains overnight. Meanwhile, there was a firmer tone to the yen, as unions in Japan pressed for their highest pay rise in three decades, resulting in a slight hardening in Japanese future contracts.

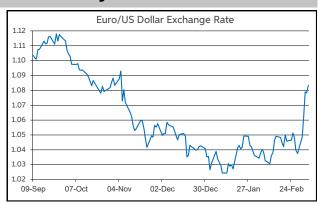

As trading gets underway this morning, EUR/USD is in the lower half of $1.08-1.09. GBP/USD is operating at the $1.29 handle. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP is changing hands up near the 84p mark. USD/JPY is down at the halfway mark of ¥147-148.

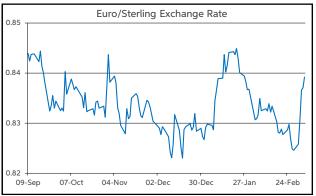

Turning to the day ahead, the main release of note will be the US labour markets report for February. Payrolls are forecast to rise by 160k in the month, while the unemployment rate and average earnings growth are project to be unchanged at 4.0% and +4.1% y/y, respectively. The data pose some event risk for the dollar.
