

Dollar softens post-Fed. BoE in focus today

In the run-up to yesterday's Fed policy announcement, the action on markets was limited. As widely anticipated, the Fed left policy on hold. Furthermore the updated interest rate dotplot showed that the median projection was still for 75bps worth of rate cuts this year. The meeting statement was also little changed, repeating that the FOMC needs "greater confidence that inflation is moving sustainably toward 2%", before cutting rates. However, at the press conference, Chair Powell stated that it will likely be appropriate to start easing policy "at some point this year".

Against this backdrop, US futures contracts softened slightly. Current pricing indicates there is an 80% chance the Fed will cut rates in June, with circa 85bps of easing expected by year end. This is broadly in-line with the Fed's own projections.

Amid the softening in US rates, Treasury yields declined by 1-10bps along the curve, led lower by the front-end. On equity markets, the S&P 500 gained 0.9%, climbing to a new all-time high. Currency-wise, the dollar fell by circa 0.5% versus the euro, sterling and yen.

In level terms, the softer dollar tone sees EUR/USD open above the $1.09 mark. GBP/USD is changing hands up at the $1.28 handle. Meanwhile, EUR/GBP continues to operate near the midpoint of 85-86p. Elsewhere, USD/JPY is in the upper half of ¥150-151.

Today, the monetary policy spotlight shifts to the Bank of England. The BoE is also expected to leave rates unaltered. Aside from the meeting statement, the main focus will be on the MPC vote split. Data-wise, the flash PMIs for March in the US, UK and Eurozone will also garner attention. Overall the data are forecast to be little changed compared to February.
