BoE cuts as expected, dollar firmer

Following Wednesday's Fed meeting conclusion, monetary policy remained in focus yesterday with the BoE policy announcement. As expected, the BoE cut rates by 25bps to 4.25%. Once again, there was no unanimity, with the vote split 5:4 in favour of the rate reduction. Meanwhile, in terms of its Monetary Policy Report for May, the BoE made only minimal changes to its baseline forecasts for GDP and inflation. Not surprisingly, the BoE called out the increased uncertainty regarding the economic outlook in light of the recent changes to US tariff policy. However, the BoE continued to espouse a gradual approach to any further rate cuts.

In terms of general market sentiment, there was a positive stance to proceedings yesterday. This was reflected in gains for equity markets on both sides of the Atlantic. In Europe, the Euro Stoxx 50 rose by 1.1%. Meanwhile, at the closing bell on Wall Street last night, the S&P was 0.6% higher on the day. Risk appetite was supported by further positive newsflow in relation to US trade policy, including the announcement of a framework agreement with the UK.

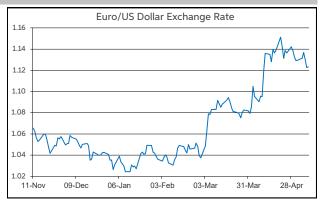

On the currency front, the dollar has been holding a firmer tone on the exchanges over the past 24 hours. The greenback was boosted by the aforementioned progress on US trade deals. Meantime, there was no notable reaction from sterling to the BoE meeting outcome. The gains for the dollar are reflected in EUR/USD opening this morning in the lower half of $1.12-1.13, GBP/USD trading below the midpoint of $1.32-1.33, while USD/JPY is back up in ¥145-146 territory. Elsewhere on the exchanges, EUR/GBP continues to operate in a tight range just below the 85p level.

Looking ahead to today, the macro diary is very quiet, with no top tier data due. Therefore the main FX pairs could trade within relatively narrow ranges heading into the weekend.
