

FX markets range bound

There was a cautious mood on markets yesterday, amid a busy data schedule on both sides of the Atlantic. Overall, the Euro Stoxx 50 gained 0.2% on the day, while the S&P 500 rose by 0.4%. However, benchmark sovereign bond yields moved 5-10bps lower, partly owing to a marginal softening in market interest rate expectations.

In the US, retail sales were slightly better than anticipated, rising by 0.1% m/m in April (vs. +0.0% f'cast). Furthermore, the March data were revised higher to +1.7% from +1.4%. However, US industrial production stagnated in April (vs. +0.2% f'cast). Meantime, producer price inflation unexpectedly declined by 0.5% in April (vs. +0.2% f'cast). Regarding more timely updates, the Empire State and NAHB homebuilder sentiment indicators deteriorated in May. In the Eurozone, GDP growth was revised lower to +0.3% in Q1 from 0.4% previously. Employment also rose by 0.3% in Q1 (vs. +0.1% f'cast). Eurozone industrial production printed above the consensus as well, expanding by 2.6% in March (vs. +1.8% f'cast).

Despite the busy data docket for investors to digest, trading conditions on currency markets were relatively steady. Indeed, the main FX pairs have operated within quite narrow ranges over the past 24 hours. Of the limited price action to note, the yen has remained in the ascendancy, while sterling has continued to benefit from strong Q1 GDP, released before yesterday's European open.

This sees EUR/GBP start today back near the 84p mark. GBP/USD is up above $1.33. Elsewhere, EUR/USD is changing hands north of the $1.12 handle. USD/JPY is down in the bottom half of the ¥145-146.

Turning to the day ahead, there is a much quieter look to the data calendar. The main release of note will be the preliminary reading of the Michigan measure of US consumer sentiment. A slight improvement from very low levels is pencilled in for May.
