EUR/USD back near $1.13

There was a cautious tone to investor sentiment yesterday, amid some mixed data releases, and as the US House passed a tax and spending bill that would increase the US deficit by up to $4 trillion over the next decade. Against this backdrop, the Euro Stoxx 50 fell by 0.4%, while the S&P 500 finished flat for the day.

Data-wise, the flash PMIs for May in the main advanced economies were the highlight. In the UK, the services PMI rose to 50.2, while the manufacturing reading declined to 45.1. Meantime, the US surveys came in ahead of expectations and in expansion mode. In contrast, both sectors were in contraction territory in the Eurozone, with the services PMI printing well below the consensus, at 48.9 (vs. 50.3 f'cast). However, the German Ifo, a key survey for the Eurozone's largest national economy, improved slightly in May.

On the currency front, the euro was under some downward pressure yesterday, owing to the weak out-turns in the PMIs. At the same time, a dovish tone to the ECB meeting minutes from the April gathering also provided an unhelpful backdrop for the euro. However, the single currency recouped most of its losses overnight.

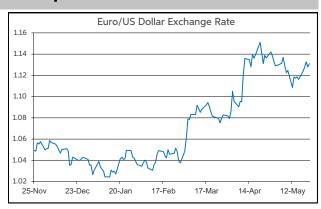

In level terms, EUR/USD opens this morning back near the $1.13 threshold, having traded to a low of $1.126 yesterday. EUR/GBP is operating down closer to the 84p mark also. Elsewhere, GBP/USD remains in the $1.34-1.35 corridor.

Already today, UK consumer confidence and retail sales have come in ahead of the consensus. Confidence improved to -20 in May (vs. -22 f'cast). Meantime, retail sales rose sharply by 1.2% in April (vs. +0.2% f'cast). Elsewhere, German GDP for Q1 has been revised higher, to +0.4% q/q from +0.2% previously. The data have not impacted FX markets so far in early trading though. The remainder of today's macro calendar is relatively sparse.
