Dollar on the front-foot

The firmer tone to risk appetite persisted yesterday, as US investors returned following their long-weekend and digested the delay to higher tariffs on EU imports. Positive data releases also supported market sentiment. The EC economic sentiment indicator improved to 94.8 (vs. 94.0 f'cast) in May, and US consumer confidence rebounded to 98.0 (vs. 87.0 f'cast) in the month. Against this backdrop, the Euro Stoxx 50 rose by 0.4%, while on Wall Street, the S&P 500 gained 2.0%.

Meantime, bond yields moved lower across the board, most notably at the long-end of the curve. The move was led by a sharp drop in Japanese 30-year yields, as reports emerged that authorities may issue fewer long-dated instruments. The reduction in US trade tensions and a downside print in French inflation (0.6% vs. 0.9% f'cast) also contributed to the downward move in yields. Overall, US Treasuries, German Bunds and UK Gilt yields were 3-7bps lower.

On the currency front, the main pairs remained confined to relatively tight ranges. Of the limited price action to note, the dollar was on the front-foot. Meanwhile, the yen has been on the defensive, amid the larger fall in Japanese yields. The greenback has moved around 0.6% higher against the euro and sterling, and is up by circa 1.1% versus the yen over the past 24 hours.

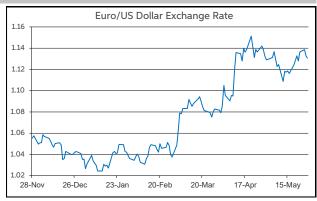

As trading gets underway this morning, this is reflected by USD/JPY starting today north of the ¥144 threshold. Elsewhere, EUR/USD is down near the $1.13 handle. GBP/USD is operating back below the $1.35 level. EUR/GBP remains just below the 84p mark.

Turning to the day ahead, the European slate is quite sparse. However, the latest Fed FOMC meeting minutes will be released after the European close. Elsewhere in terms of monetary policy, remarks from a number of Fed officials will also warrant attention.
