

No surprises from Fed, BoE in focus today

For much of yesterday, markets were in a wait-and-see mode with the conclusion of the Fed's two-day policy setting meeting occurring after the European close. The meeting outcome itself was very much in line with expectations. The Fed left its key target range unchanged in a 5.25-5.50% range for the second consecutive meeting. The meeting statement was also lacking in surprises. Meanwhile, Fed Chair Powell did not provide any new guidance in his post-meeting press conference. He retained the option to hike rates again, if required.

In terms of market reaction, US Treasury yields, which were already in decline following a weaker than forecast manufacturing ISM, continued to fall in the aftermath of the Fed outcome/press conference. The 10-year Treasury yield fell below the 4.8% level, to trade nearer to 4.7%.

From a currency perspective, the dollar is softer over the past 24 hours, although the extent of this is relatively mild compared to the fall in US yields. In level terms, EUR/USD opens this morning up very near to the $1.06 threshold. Meanwhile, GBP/USD is changing hands in the upper half of $1.21-1.22. Elsewhere, EUR/GBP is trading at 87p, having spent much of yesterday just below this mark.

Looking ahead to today, the focus shifts to the BoE meeting. The market is attaching a very low probability to the central bank raising the Bank rate from its current level of 5.25%. However, the meeting does entail some event risk from a sterling viewpoint. The market will be closely analysing the Bank's updated macro forecasts and Governor Bailey's press conference for guidance on the outlook for UK interest rates.
